1. Introduction

1.1. Document Objective

This document describes the process of executing a marketing review (a.k.a. marketing audit), which is a comprehensive inspection of the market and the company's preparedness for it. The marketing review helps establish foundational information for use in an entire range of strategies, tactics, and performance parameters.

<Comment: The concept of a marketing review (a.k.a. marketing audit) was first established by Philip Kotler. He stated that "A marketing audit is a comprehensive, systematic, independent, and periodic examination of a company's or business unit's marketing environment, objectives, strategies, and activities with a view of determining problem areas and opportunities and recommending a plan of action to improve the company's marketing performance".>

2. Fundamental Phases of a Marketing Review

2.1. Section Objective

This section describes the three phases of a marketing review. The marketing review is overwhelmingly based on a series of interviews with the company's relevant personnel.

<Comment: The marketing review is a systematic, broad scope, strategic engagement. It is strongly recommended that the marketing review interviews be led and conducted by professional marketing reviewers external to the company being reviewed.>

2.2. Phase 1 – Setting the Objectives and Scope

The first phase of a marketing review has the marketing reviewer(s), and company stakeholders define and agree upon the parameters and boundaries (objectives, coverage, participants, resources, time frame, and resources) of the marketing review. During the late stage of this phase, the marketing review plan, a list of scheduled interviews and topics that will be addressed, are established.

<Comment: The audit review should address the company's marketing operations as a whole.>

2.3. Phase 2 – Gathering the Data

The second phase of a marketing review is when the interviews are conducted, and data is collected.

<Comment: The marketing reviewer(s) should not rely on the opinions of a select few. Cross-referencing of topics in interviews with different people is essential.>

2.4. Phase 3 – Conclusions and Recommendations

The third phase of a marketing review has the marketing reviewer(s), and company stakeholders independently review the raw data and form any tentative conclusions and recommendations. This is followed by a joint session that establishes the final and mutually agreed conclusions and recommendations. During the late stage of this phase, a summary report is prepared jointly or by either the marketing reviewer(s) or company stakeholders. The summary report has three parts: stating the objectives of the marketing review, presenting the main conclusions, and arguing the major recommendations.

<Comment: The marketing review aims to correct the company's processes and market strategies. It is recommended that the company conduct a marketing review every quarter and one extensive marketing review annually.>

3. Marketing Review Components

3.1. Section Objective

Marketing reviews follow a principle of External to Internal, first exploring the entire external marketplace environment (markets, customers, competitors, distributors, dealers, suppliers, and facilitators) and then moving internally into the company to thoroughly examine the company's marketing objectives and strategies, organization, and systems. A complete marketing review comprises seven major components (ordered in a logical diagnostic sequence), with each component having a semi-autonomous status.

3.2. Components of a Marketing Review
